Components of Acceptable Engineering Work Experience

Work experience is an essential element in determining whether or not an individual is acceptable for professional licensing. The responsibility for providing the proper environment, opportunities, range and progression of activities necessary to meet the work experience requirements rests with the employers of applicants, and the individuals who provide supervision during the internship period. Acceptable engineering work experience must include the application of theory and should provide exposure to, or experience in the following broad areas: practical experience, management, communication, and the social implications of engineering. Assessment of the acceptability of the work experience is based on the extent to which the applicant's experience includes these areas, each of which is outlined in the following sections.

For a person who is registered as an engineer-in-training on or after January 1, 2019 or a person who is registered as an engineer-in-training on or before December 31, 2018 who has not submitted any experience reports by December 31, 2018, experience in engineering work satisfactory to the Council comprises the following competency-based assessment elements:

1. Technical competence
2. Communication
3. Project and financial management
4. Team effectiveness
5. Professional Accountability
6. Social, economic, environmental and sustainability
7. Personal Continuing Professional Development

For a person who is registered as an engineer-in-training on or before December 31, 2018 and who has submitted at least one experience report on or before December 31, 2018, experience in engineering work satisfactory to the Council includes the following:

- (1) Application of Theory
 - (a) analysis (for example: scope and operating conditions, feasibility assessment, safety and environmental issues, technology assessment, and economic assessment, etc.);
 - (b) design and synthesis (for example: functionality or product specification, component selection, integration of components and subsystems into larger systems, reliability and maintenance factors, human and environmental aspects, and the societal implications of the product or process, etc);
 - (c) testing methods (for example: devising testing methodology and techniques, functional specification verification, and new product or technology commissioning and assessment, etc.); and,
 - (d) implementation methods (for example: technology application, engineering cost studies, optimization techniques, process flow and time studies, quality assurance implementation, cost/benefit analysis, safety and environmental issues and recommendations, and maintenance and replacement evaluation, etc.).
- (2) Practical Experience
 - (a) site visits to existing engineering works, with opportunities to see equipment and systems in both operational and maintenance circumstances;
 - (b) application of equipment as part of the larger system, including, for example, the merits of reliability, the role of computer software, and understanding the end product or engineering work in relationship to the equipment;

- (c) opportunities to experience and understand the limitations of practical engineering and related human systems in achieving desired goals, including limitations of production methods, manufacturing tolerances, performance minima, maintenance philosophies, etc.; and
 - (d) opportunities to experience the significance of time in the engineering process, including workflow, scheduling, equipment wear-out and replacement scheduling, etc.
- (3) Management of Engineering
- (a) planning, from conception through to implementation. This includes: needs assessment, concept development, assessment of resources required, and assessment of impacts, including societal and project implementation;
 - (b) scheduling, from establishing interactions and constraints, developing activity or task schedules, and allocation of resources, through to the assessment of delay impacts and beyond to broader aspects, such as interactions with other projects and the marketplace;
 - (c) budgeting, including the development of preliminary and detailed budgets, identifying labour, materials and overhead, risk analysis, life-cycle analysis, and tracking;
 - (d) supervision, including leadership, professional conduct, organization of human resources, team building, and management of technology;
 - (e) project control, including co-ordination of work phases, tracking and monitoring costs and progress, and implementing changes to reflect actual progress and needs; and
 - (f) risk-analysis related to operating equipment and system performance, product performance evaluation, and evaluation of societal and environmental impacts.
- (4) Social Implications of Engineering
- (a) a recognition of the value and benefits of the engineering work to the public;
 - (b) an understanding of the safeguards required to protect the public and methods of mitigating adverse impacts;
 - (c) an understanding of the relationship between the engineering activity and the public;
 - (d) a demonstrated interest and involvement in the broader social implications of engineering;
 - (e) an appreciation of the role of regulatory bodies on the practice of engineering; and
 - (f) an understanding of the provincial health and safety of the workplace legislation.
- (5) Communication Skills
- (a) preparation of written work, including day-to-day correspondence, record-keeping, and report writing;
 - (b) making oral reports or presentations to colleagues, supervisors, senior management, and an exposure to, or participation in, reports to clients and regulators; and
 - (c) making public presentations.

APPENDIX 4

Components of Acceptable Geoscience Work Experience

The following criteria are designed to provide guidance to candidates, employers and supervisors with respect to the experience expected of a geoscientist-in-training applying for professional registration. Acceptable geoscience work experience must include the application of the knowledge of geoscience principles and practice and should provide exposure to, or experience in the following broad areas: management, communication, and the social implications of geoscience. Assessment of the acceptability of the work experience is based on the extent to which the applicant's experience includes these areas which are outlined in the following sections.

(1) Application of the Knowledge of Geoscience Principles and Practice

The skillful application of geoscience knowledge is essential to earning professional registration and licensure. To be accepted, a candidate's experience shall include active and responsible participation in the following aspects of geoscience:

- (a) geoscience training and familiarization;
- (b) technical geoscience experience;
- (c) development of geologic concepts (for example: preparation of reports concerning deposits of rocks, minerals or other naturally-occurring earth materials); and,
- (d) mapping and systematic geoscience evaluation (with specific reference to bedrock, unconsolidated earth materials and/or snow, ice, groundwater, surface water and constituents thereof);
- (e) identification of geologic hazards and risk to the public and the environment.

(2) Management of Geoscience

Management in geoscience includes the supervision of staff, project leadership, budgeting and the socially responsible application of geoscientific principles and practices. Candidates must be able to document reasonable progression toward increasing management involvement and responsibility over time.

(3) Social Implications of Geoscience

The practice of geoscience has significant impact on the public in the fields of public and environmental safety, industry, finance and education. Candidates should become aware of the geoscientist's role in society and the social impact of projects in which they are involved. They should understand the role of the geoscientist from these points of view including environmental, economic and the advancement of knowledge. The objective is to foster an awareness of the geoscientist's professional responsibility to guard against conditions which threaten life, property or the environment and to call such conditions to the attention of those responsible.

(4) Communication Skills

During the training period, candidates should be required to communicate effectively with superiors, co-workers, government regulators, clients and the general public. They should become proficient in the written and oral presentation of geoscience from daily record-keeping to major reports.

APPENDIX 5

Section 5 of The Engineering and Geoscience Professions Act states the Objects of the Association and speaks to the need for a Continuing Professional Development Program.

As well, clause 20(2)(d) of the Regulatory Bylaws (the Code of Ethics) requires members to:

Keep themselves informed in order to maintain their competencies, strive to advance the body of knowledge with which they practice and provide opportunities for professional development of their subordinates.

The Continuing Professional Development Program establishes a benchmark against which members will evaluate their ongoing professional development activities and provides tools for analyzing needs, planning programs, and recording and reporting activities.

The Continuing Professional Development Program requires the following annual components:

- (1) Ethics Component
 - (a) members must complete an annual ethics component, as outlined in the Continuing Professional Development Program document.
- (2) Minimum Credit Requirements

 - (i) individual scope of practice;
 - (ii) program plan; and
 - (iii) a detailed record of completed activities and the number of credits earned;
 - (c) members shall report their Continuing Professional Development annually, as directed in the Continuing Professional Development Program document.

(5) Program Variation

Members with special circumstances may apply for reduced Continuing Professional Development requirements by submitting a Continuing Professional Development Program Variation Request in the manner outlined in the Continuing Professional Development Program document.
