be designated as Provincial Heritage Property pursuant to sections 39 and 41 of The Heritage Property Act.

The reasons for the proposed designation are as follows:

The site was a centre for trade between Indigenous peoples and European fur traders during the late 18th century, the earliest phase of the competitive inland fur trade period in Saskatchewan.

Its association with the smallpox epidemic of 1781-82 that had a profound impact on the region's Indigenous peoples and the course of history in the province.

The presence of archaeological remains of up to three competing fur trading posts that operated contemporaneously, and the likelihood of discovering archaeological evidence of the Indigenous traders who visited the posts, provides a unique opportunity to further our understanding of this complex period in Saskatchewan's history.
