

Saskatchewan RCMP – Release of a violent sexual offender at high risk to reoffend

2022-03-10

9:00 a.m.

In the interest of public safety, Saskatchewan RCMP advises the residents of Big River First Nation and of its surrounding communities that an offender considered to be at high risk of reoffending sexually and/or violently has been released from prison, on the morning of March 10, 2022, after having served the entirety of his sentence.

THE FOLLOWING INFORMATION IS INTENDED TO ENABLE MEMBERS OF THE PUBLIC TO TAKE SUITABLE PREVENTATIVE MEASURES, NOT TO EMBARK UPON ANY FORM OF VIGILANTISM OR OTHER UNREASONABLE CONDUCT DIRECTED AT THIS INDIVIDUAL.

Bradley Cory Keenatch has shared with Saskatchewan RCMP his intentions to reside on Big River First Nation. He is described as a 38-year-old Indigenous male of medium build, (5'10", 179 lbs), with brown eyes and short black hair. He has the word Charmaine tattooed on the interior of his right arm and a complex drawing with black roses tattooed on his left hand, wrist and lower arm.

Bradley Cory Keenatch has a criminal record that contains both violent and sexual offences connected to substance use and a history of reoffending and non-compliance with release conditions. During his periods of incarceration, he completed several educational programs for high intensity sex offenders, substance abuse, violence prevention and Indigenous cultural awareness.

Bradley Cory Keenatch's criminal history and limited progress during these educational programs has led Saskatchewan RCMP to believe he is at a high risk of reoffending sexually and/or violently after his lawful release.

To help mitigate the risk to public safety and contribute to Mr. Keenatch's rehabilitation, the Saskatchewan RCMP High Risk Offender Unit is currently working with its provincial partners to have conditions imposed on Bradley Cory Keenatch for a period of two years after his lawful release, in accordance with Section 810.1 and Section 810.2 of the Criminal Code.
